De-cluttering Chorlton High Street

In the past people went to the high street for shopping and work, just like today, but they also went for entertainment and leisure. To put the heart back into the High Street we reimagine it as a destination for socialising, culture, health, wellbeing, creativity and learning. A place to hold events that attract crowds.

The redesign creates a single surface for pedestrians and road users with no road markings, signs or other unnecessary furniture. The paving pattern ties in with new planting that defines the centre of the High Street. This creates a transitional zone without forming a permanent barrier where there are parking bays, cycle racks, planters and other items of street furniture.
